Historically, pandemics have forced humans to break with the past and imagine their world anew. This one is no different. It is a portal, a gateway between one world and the next. —Arundhati Roy

This course offers students from any major the opportunity to learn how people from various disciplines in the arts, humanities, and environmental sciences are working across disciplines to create a future that is deeply rooted in environmental and social justice. Every week, students will meet and engage with a renowned guest speaker. Students will be encouraged to think creatively and critically about integrating intersectional justice into their own scholarship and careers.

- Erin Moore, associate professor of architecture, University of Oregon
- Nia Eshu Martin-Robinson, director of black leadership and engagement at Planned Parenthood
- Michael Paul Nelson, professor of environmental ethics and philosophy, OSU
- Vanessa Raditz, film director and queer cultural geographer
- Elizabeth Sawin, co-director of Climate Interactive

Fulfills Science, Technology, and Society Bacc Core requirement
4 credits
FMI: Carly Lettero, carly.lettero@oregonstate.edu