Notes: This shows average for each president's entire time in office, for example, both non-consecutive terms for Grover Cleveland, in calculating his average inflation-adjusted pay. When a president died or left office before the end of his term, the calculation assumes that both the president and succeeding vice-president had that pay for that entire year (so that year "double-counts"), even if the departure occurred very early or very late in the year. The pay of Presidents Grant and Truman increased between their first and second terms; the second-term current pay is shown.
