"Contours of Race and Ethnicity: Racial Formation in the Higher Education Experiences of Hmong American Students"
Rican Vue
Research Associate and Lecturer, UCLA
Adjunct Faculty, University of San Francisco

Abstract: Hmong Americans provide an example that highlights the socioeconomic complexity and cultural diversity of contemporary immigrant populations, yet little is known about their higher education experiences. This talk examines the role of race in shaping the visibility of Hmong Americans and focuses on how Hmong American University students actively resist their racialization on campus. The presentation concludes with implications for campus policy and practices that affirm diversity and difference, followed by next steps in research.
